

ALERT

*Relevant Alerts
Direct to Your Inbox*

May 25, 2011

California Ruling May Have Broad Sales Tax Implications for Prewritten Computer Software

Dear Clients and Friends,

On April 27, 2011, the California Supreme Court declined to review the Court of Appeal's decision in Nortel Networks, Inc. v. State Board of Equalization. This precedential decision may have far reaching implications on the taxation of prewritten software, or "canned software," for sales and use tax purposes. Examples of canned software include Microsoft Office, Quickbooks, and other software programs.

Historically, the sale or lease of canned software has been subject to California sales or use tax if it was delivered via a physical media, such as a diskette or CD-ROM. On the other hand, the sale of custom software and licensing agreements (computer programs that have been created and tailored to the specific needs of an end customer) have traditionally not been subject to California sales or use tax under the Technology Transfer Agreement ("TTA") provisions. A TTA is defined as "any agreement under which a person who holds a patent or copyright interest assigns or licenses to another person the right to make and sell a product or to use a process that is subject to the patent or copyright interest." However, regulations issued by the SBE provided that a TTA "does not mean an agreement for the transfer of prewritten software."

In the underlying case, the California Court of Appeals held that a license of certain prewritten software met the California sales and use tax exemption for transfers of intangible property pursuant to a Technology Transfer Agreement ("TTA") under the applicable state statutes. Moreover, the appellate court also held that the State Board of Equalization ("SBE") had exceeded its authority by issuing regulations that excluded all prewritten software programs from the definition of a TTA.

Based on the longstanding position that the sale of canned software was subject to sales tax, many companies have been collecting California sales or use tax on all of their sales or licenses of prewritten software. As a result of this ruling, software vendors and their customers should revisit their end user agreements to determine if their end user agreements adhere to the TTA provisions. In addition, those vendors that have collected sales tax on behalf of their customers or companies that have paid use tax may consider filing claims for refund for any open tax years. Additional guidance will likely be released by the SBE regarding the refund claim process in the near future.

If you have any questions about how this case may apply to your company or any other questions, please contact your Green Hasson Janks tax advisor at (310) 873-1600.

Copyright © 2011 Green Hasson & Janks LLP. All rights reserved. An Independent Member Firm of HLB International.

The information presented is only of a general nature, intended simply as background material, is current only as of its indicated date, omits many details and special rules and accordingly cannot be regarded as legal or tax advice. This material is not intended to constitute a complete analysis of all tax considerations. Internal Revenue Service regulations generally provide that for the purpose of avoiding United States federal tax penalties, a taxpayer may rely only on formal written opinions meeting specific regulatory requirements. This material does not meet those requirements. Accordingly, this material was not intended or written to be used, and a taxpayer cannot use it, for the purpose of avoiding United States federal or other penalties or of promoting, marketing or recommending to another party any tax-related matters.

This publication is issued periodically to keep Green Hasson Janks clients and other interested parties informed on current tax developments that may affect or otherwise be of interest to them. To update your e-mail address or remove yourself from future tax notifications, please send an e-mail to alerts@greenhassonjanks.com.